RISK FACTORS

Credit risk: if the Issuer is in payment default (for example following bankruptcy), the investor runs the risk that their initial capital will be repaid only partially or even not at all on maturity.

Capital risk: the risk that the initial capital is not fully repaid on maturity. This repayment depends on the movements in the underlying security. A partial loss of capital is possible.

Liquidity risk: the warrants are not listed on the stock market, so that the probability that a secondary market will be formed is limited. If the investor wishes to sell their warrant before maturity, they will be bound by the bid/offer prices at the time. Intermediate selling prices may therefore be below the issue price as a result of changes in market conditions.

Market risk: the price of the warrant may fluctuate, depending, among other things, on interest rates, market volatility, the net asset value of the underlying security and the issuer's financial soundness.

Interest rate risk: an interest rate rise or fall will influence the (bid or offer) price.

Risk on the warrant's underlying: any event or incident occurring in relation to the underlying will have a direct effect on the warrant issued such as (but not limited to) its price, its liquidity and its volatility.
